

CONVERSATION STARTERS - BULLYING PLANTS

Before beginning the experiment

What do you think the plant that is being bullied will do over the next few weeks?

Do you think that plants have feelings? What makes you think this?

What types of things do people say to you that make you feel good?

What things have people said to you that make you feel bad?

These are only guided questions to get you started!

Once you start the open conversation within your home, it will lead to a variety of different conversations. It may even help your child open up to you.

During the experiment

Have you noticed anything strange happening to the plants?

Why do you think that is happening?

Do you think that if we start being nice to the plant means it grows stronger?

How could we do something similar at school?

After the experiment

Why is it important that we are always nice to people?

What can we do to be a good friend?

What do you think you should do if you see someone being mean to another person?

Do you think that plants have feelings? How do we know?

If you are concerned about the impact of bullying on your child, make sure you have a conversation with your school and family gp.
